“He is the young potter from Japan who engaged us all at the post-NCECA teabowl workshop at Tacoma C.C; where he competed for our attention with Rob Fornell, Richard Milgrim, and Jeff Shapiro. His affect was so disarming, and his techniques so unusual that even with little English he had us from the beginning to the end.”

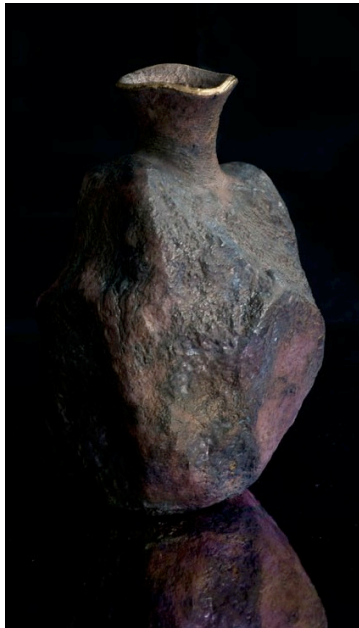

-Hank Murrow, Eugene

Inayoshi Osamu

"I can report that Inayoshi's presentation at Tacoma Community College after the Seattle NCECA was one of four going on simultaneously during the two days. Ina had twenty to forty people attentive at all times while he effortlessly handbuilt tea and sake pieces. His approach to handbuilding is direct and creative, using rocks found around the venue, and molds that he brings from Japan and will leave at each venue he visits so folks can continue trying what he shows."

– H. M.

"He has little command of English, but his charming & disarming and personality makes everything clear. A natural showman, I commend him highly. We will endeavor to have a Japanese speaker on hand to help him explain his process. I look forward to bringing him to each venue and watching him captivate all present." – H.M

“Here are some web sites that reveal something about the man and his work. In person, he is animated and funny while demonstrating his extraordinary skills, most of which will be new to Oregon potters.” – H.M.
